

Dictation Contest (PRJr, 初級) No. 66

Hello, everyone!

Today, we will read Frozen.

Not long ago in the kingdom, summer had arrived. But it was winter inside the castle, where Princess Elsa and Anna were playing. Elsa had magical powers and could create things out of snow and ice. She made a snowman. Anna was very delighted.

Good job, everyone! See you next time!

Dictation Contest (PR1, 中級) No. 66

Hello, everyone!

This is another PR1 dictation video. Today I am not reading Harry Potter, I am reading a book called Roadwork by Stephen King. He is a very famous writer.

It was snowing a little out of a gray sky. It was the first snow of the year and it landed on the pavement like white splotches of baking soda, then melted. He saw a little boy in a red knitted cap go by with his mouth open and his tongue out to catch a flake. It's just going to melt, Freddy, he thought at the kid, but the kid went on anyway, with his head cocked back at the sky.

Okay, I hope you guys enjoyed that. I will see you guys in another video. Take care!

Dictation Contest (PR2 上級) No. 66

Hey, guys! How are you doing?

Hope you're still staying healthy and safe. I've come across another fairly interesting news article here, so take a listen to this:

The Meteorological Agency's Sendai office received a number of inquiries June 17th about a white balloonlike object floating in the sky over the city, leaving agency officials bewildered and some Twitter users excited. "It is not something flown by the Meteorological Agency, and we don't have a clue what it is," an agency official said. "We checked with the Sendai Municipal Government and the Self-Defense Forces, but they don't know either." "Is it a UFO?" one Twitter user said, while another said, "It looks like a hot air balloon."

Oh... What do you think? Could it be a UFO? Some distant alien vessel? Or could it be some secret science experiment? Or is it just some student project that's gone wrong?

Let me know what you think, OK, guys?

Alright, study hard, stay safe, and see you soon.